This authoritative volume reviews the breadth of current scientific knowledge on subjective well-being (SWB): its definition, causes and consequences, measurement, and practical applications that may help people become happier. Leading experts explore the connections between SWB and a range of intrapersonal and interpersonal phenomena, including personality, health, relationship satisfaction, wealth, cognitive processes, emotion regulation, religion, family life, school and work experiences, and culture. Interventions and practices that enhance SWB are examined, with attention to both their benefits and limitations. The concluding chapter from Ed Diener dispels common myths in the field and presents a thoughtful agenda for future research. Background: Children alleging sexual abuse rarely exhibit emotion when disclosing, but they may be able to describe their subjective reactions to abuse if asked.Objective: This study examined the extent to which different types of questions in child sexual abuse interviews elicited subjective content, namely emotional reactions, cognitive content, and physical sensations.Participants and Setting: The study included transcripts of 205 Child Advocacy Center interviews with 4- to 12-year-old children alleging sexual abuse.Methods: We coded questions for question type, distinguishing among invitations, wh- questions, yes/no and forced-choice questions, and suggestive questions. We coded both questions and answers for whether they referenced subjective content.Results: When questions did not reference subjective content, the most productive questions were invitations, though they elicited subjective content less than 5% of the time. When questions specifically referenced subjective content, children were likely to explicitly mention such content, particularly in response to “how feel” and “what think” questions. Children's responsiveness and productivity was enhanced by requests to elaborate on their subjective responses, and both emotional and physical reactions could be elicited. There was little evidence of non-responsiveness or counter intuitive reactions to abuse. Younger children were less likely than older children to provide subjective responses to questions that did not reference subjective content, but were no less likely to do so when asked questions with subjective content.Conclusions: Children, even young children, can be successfully encouraged to provide subjective content about sexual abuse, particularly when free recall questions are supplemented with “how feel” or “what think” questions. These Guidelines represent the first attempt to provide international recommendations on collecting, publishing, and analysing subjective well-being data. Digital Solutions DESCRIPTION The number one benefit of Information Technology is that it empowers people to do what they want to do. It lets people be creative. It lets people be productive. It lets people learn things they didn't think they could learn before, and so in a sense it is all about potential. — Steve Ballmer Information Technology is all about using computers to store, retrieve, access or manipulate information which directly or indirectly affects our daily lives. Information Technology and business today are interwoven in a way that they cannot be talked about in isolation to each other and go hand in hand. Trackpad Information Technology series for Grade IX and X has covered CBSE recommended syllabus to ensure that all the aspects from previous year are taken up in a continued manner. The series covers the topics with an aim of understanding with practical utilization and simple to learn methodology. There are activities involving brainstorming, which try to induce the readers to apply their learning into practice. The competency-based questions are guided by CBSE, and they ensure that students develop the capability to apply their learning to solve real-life issues that they come across. We would like to humbly acknowledge the support provided by our family, friends and Orange Education Pvt Ltd team to accomplish this noble task. We hope that this book will be used by the students to make their future ready to use Information Technology to the best in their day-to-day life. Enjoy the journey of happy learning!! All your feedback and suggestions will always be wholeheartedly welcomed to improve and grow. WHAT WILL YOU LEARN You will learn about: ? Communication skills ? Self-Management skills ?
