Excerpt from The Development of Osseous Fishes, Vol. 2: The

Pre-Embryonic Stages of Development; Part Second, the History of the Egg: Cleavage, Formation of the Periblast, and Development of the Germ Ring The material found appeared in the form of descriptions of drawings (very likely first draft), which were fortunately grouped systematically. The records were not numbered as on the published plates but bore a number which I have placed in parenthesis after the number of the plate as it appears in this publication. The number in parenthesis occurred on the original drawings, in pencil, in almost every case. Thus the description of Fig. 1 in Plate XXXII was numbered 12 in the records left by Professor Whitman, and this number also appears on the original drawing.
