Jointly Published with the British Royal Armouries Medieval fighting has long been thought to be chaotic and untutored. Visions of men madly slashing to and fro and hoping for the best have dominated not only popular culture but modern histories of fencing as well. In recent years, the survival of more than 175 fighting treatises from the Middle Ages and Renaissance has provided a whole generation of enthusiasts, scholars, reenactors and stage choreographers with a wealth of new information. This text represents the earliest known text on swordsmanship anywhere in the world. Royal Armouries I.33 presents a system of combat that is sophisticated and demonstrates the d fighting arts beyond the military classes. Within the manuscripts richly illustrate color illustrations lie still-potent demonstrates of sword techniques, surprisingly by a Priest and Scholar. Most surprisingly, however, is the presence of a woman practicing in the text, the only one illustrated in any European fighting treatise. The full color facsimile & translation has been long-awaited and promises to become an important resource for years to come
